NARRATOR: For many graduates, having something to show from your degree can be the reason you find work after you've graduated. For Michael Smith that's exactly what Swinburne gave him.

MICHAEL: By the time that I graduated, I had a lot of experience behind me and a really good folio to get me into the industry. Beyond that as well, Swinburne really teach you to become a self sufficient learner as well. So you're really prepared.

NARRATOR: Recently graduating from a Bachelor of Design Communications with Design Honours. Michael now works in an agency based in Melbourne.

MICHAEL: Definitely do Swinburne. I know from my own personal experiences, the teachers are super personable, they know who you are, you're not just a number to them. You know, after a while, you know they know your interests, they know your strengths and things that you want to do.

NARRATOR: He says his job is all thanks to his final year portfolio work, answering a brief to recreate the book Invisible Cities, and credits his achievement to the support he received at Swinburne.

MICHAEL: And they're really invested in trying to help you get better at those things and you know and get to where you want to be.
